

The New Way of Working

Applying the Humanitarian, Development & Peace Nexus

A new way of working

- Humanitarian interventions should apply early recovery approaches in the response, and seek integration with existing health services and transition of governance to local authorities
- Development oriented workstreams should target fragile and conflict affected areas in a more operational manner, addressing key bottlenecks in health system performance that also constrain the humanitarian response, with more flexibility in contracts and adapted management of risks.
- Fostering the interface between them through connections in analysis, planning and coordination

Collective HDN outcomes in FCV settings, prioritising those in most need and/or left behind:

- Universal Health Coverage based on PHC approach: ensuring that people can use essential quality services when they need them without suffering financial hardship
- Preparedness of the health system and communities for shocks.

STRATEGIC FRAMEWORK

For collective programming in fragile, conflict and vulnerable settings

(in progress under GPW 2.3.3.)

Proposed predictable joint actions to be taken

- Build on innovative mechanisms emerging between humanitarian and development health partners in FCVs
- Development of common tools and approaches for:
 - Joint situation, needs and health system analysis
 - Costed Essential/Minimum Packages of Quality Health Services adapted to the different operational and security contexts that co-exist in FCV settings
 - Health systems strengthening and inputs from health service programs for EPqHS implementation plan and financing strategy
 - Context specific solutions for connections between humanitarian and development Coordination Platforms
 - Early warning and alert system, and implementation of hazard specific contingency plans for identified priority risks
 - Innovative models for logistics support, supply chain management and access to affordable quality essential medicines
 - Development of standard monitoring framework and knowledge agenda
